

The real high technology of medicine... is the kind that is so effective that it seems to attract the least public notice; it has become to be taken for granted. This is the genuinely decisive technology of modern medicine, exemplified best by the modern methods of immunization.

-- Lewis Thomas, "Lives of a Cell."