THE BIG QUESTIONS

• Are all young people in your community ready for college, work and life?
• Are your neighborhoods offering enough high quality supports year-round?
• Do leaders in your community work collectively and effectively towards big goals for children and youth?

If not, Ready by 21 Can Help
Organizations have attempted to solve social problems by collaboration for decades without producing many results. The vast majority of these efforts lack the elements of success that enable collective impact initiatives to achieve a sustained alignment of efforts…

“Our research shows that successful collective impact initiatives typically have five conditions that together produce true alignment and lead to powerful results:

- a common agenda
- shared measurement systems
- mutually reinforcing activities
- continuous communication
- backbone support organizations
Common Purpose

We need coalitions not only to be stronger individually, but stronger together. We need:

- a common agenda that speaks to improving academic, health and social outcomes of children from birth to young adulthood

- shared measurement systems that not only track children’s progress, but link that progress to performance improvements of the systems and settings where children spend their time

- mutually reinforcing activities not only among providers on the front lines, but among coalitions and decision makers working on everything from prenatal care to college success

- continuous communication within and across all levels of the infrastructure and out to the public

- backbone supports organized in a way that ensures the success of the whole even when the support functions are spread across several entities.
The Need: Well-Prepared Youth

“The continued ability of states to compete in the global economy hinges on how well they enable their younger citizens to attain the competencies and social attributes necessary to ultimately fuel economic growth and contribute to the well-being of their families and communities.”

— National Governors Association’s Center for Best Practices
October 2003
The Challenge: Too Few Young People Are Ready

Researchers Gambone, Connell and Klem (2002) estimate that only 4 out of 10 young people are doing well in their early 20s.

22% are having difficulty
Definition: Doing poorly in two life areas and not well in any

• Productivity: Have high school diploma or less, be unemployed, on welfare

• Health: Have poor health, health habits, unsupportive relationships

• Connectedness: Commit an illegal activity about once a month

43% are doing well
Definition: Doing well in two life areas and okay in one

• Productivity: Attending college or working steadily

• Health: Have good health, health habits, healthy relationships

• Connectedness: Volunteer, be politically active, be active in religious institutions, community
The National Research Council reports that teens need:

- Physical and psychological safety
- Appropriate structure
- Supportive relationships
- Opportunities to belong
- Positive social norms
- Support for efficacy and mattering
- Opportunities for skill-building
- Integration of family, school and community efforts

Do these supports really matter? YES
ABSOLUTELY

Gambone and colleagues show that youth with supportive relationships as they enter high school are 5 times more likely to leave high school “ready” than those with weak relationships.

Do these Supports Make a Difference in Adulthood?

... and those seniors who were “ready” at the end of high school were more than 4 times as likely to be doing well as young adults.

Providing these Supports Can Change the Odds

Gambone/Connell's research suggests that if all young people got the supports they needed in early adolescence, the picture could change…

What did success lead to?

- Community Confidence Boosted?
  Yes. By setting clear goals and documenting its contribution in selected neighborhoods, Metro Safe Streets Coalition was able to garner support for adding additional neighborhoods.

- Community Evaluation Model Introduced?
  Yes. Other Coalitions signed up to use this planning and evaluation approach.

- Community Leaders Aligned?
  No. There was no incentive or opportunity to look for overlap in partners, indicators, and strategies.
Example: Partner Comparison
